

BTC Operating System Alert Setup Card

Version v1.1.1

The rule that matters most

Create alerts on BITSTAMP:BTCUSD, 1W, regular candles, and choose one alert path you will actually follow. The preferred off-chart path is one Any alert() function call alert on Once Per Bar Close; reminder-only named alerts are still valid if you prefer manual dashboard checks. After updating scripts, delete and recreate alerts so TradingView uses the current version.

Indicator page: AZRO Systems - BTC Operating System (Invite-Only)
Product / access page: AZRO Systems Gumroad
Support: support@azrosystems.com

Correct triggers

| Condition / path          | Trigger            | Why                                                                                                                                                           |
|---------------------------|--------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Any alert() function call | Once Per Bar Close | Exact weekly guidance path. Delivers the confirmed weekly HOLD / BUY / TRIM guidance and current amount when applicable, plus concise weekly message details. |
| Weekly Update             | Once Per Bar Close | Reminder-only weekly review alert if you prefer the dashboard-check workflow.                                                                                 |
| Major Cycle Event         | Once Per Bar Close | Rare serious review weeks that can align with major top or bottom conditions forming. Treat it as a high-priority review alert, not as auto-execution.        |

Recommended alert paths

Choose one live path first

Path A: one Any alert() function call alert if you want the exact weekly guidance and amount pushed off-chart. Path B: Weekly Update, plus optional Major Cycle Event, if you prefer reminder-only alerts and a manual dashboard review. Path C: no alerts if you reliably review the dashboard yourself after every confirmed 1W close.

Naming convention

- If you use the exact-message path, keep the name literal: BTC Weekly Guidance Email 1W.
- If you keep reminder alerts, use BTC Weekly Update 1W and BTC Major Cycle Event 1W.
- If you maintain multiple sleeves or accounts, include the sleeve name in the alert title. If you automate, also include the mode and Risk level for easier later debugging.

Common mistakes

- Creating the alert on a non-1W chart, or on a chart basis outside the intended BTC workflow.
- Assuming the alert updates after you change settings or update the script. TradingView alerts keep using the settings that existed when the alert was created.
- Treating Major Cycle Event as an order instruction instead of a review instruction.
- Running both reminder paths and the exact-message path when you only wanted one weekly notification route.
- Sending webhooks or bridges live before you have sandboxed the full route with paper or test capital.

Manual versus automation

| Path                               | Best for                                                     | Watch-out                                                                      |
|------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Manual weekly review               | Beginners and users who want the calmest workflow.           | Requires you to actually check the dashboard after the confirmed weekly close. |
| Exact-message email / webhook path | Users who want ACTION and the current amount sent off-chart. | Still requires settings discipline, testing, and clear downstream risk limits. |
| Reminder-only named alerts         | Users who want cadence without extra automation.             | Still review the dashboard; the reminder is not the whole decision.            |

Best default in one sentence

Run the workflow on BITSTAMP:BTCUSD, 1W, regular candles; keep one alert path live only if it helps you stay consistent; and make the real decision from ACTION plus amount on the confirmed weekly close.